Short-haired, aging weirdos threaten campus as university administrators go on strike

The administration went on strike against the students' union to back up a list of their demands here today.

The demands were:

- parity representation on students' council,
- re-instatement of the year book,
- students' council sing the apathetic mass in four part harmony at the beginning, the end, and in the middle of each meeting,
- the abolition of Marx from the university system.

The demands drawn up at a mass meeting last Thursday, were presented to the students' council executive last Friday, but they were rejected out of hand by council president David Lead-Beaten.

"I will never give in to the demands of a few short-haired, middle-aged weirdos," said Mr. Lead-Beaten.

Over 200 members of the administration pressed their demands Monday with a march on students' council meeting at College St. Jean. Fifty of them made it.

After panting slogans like, "Ivory Towers Forever," and waving placards reading "to Hell with Warrendale" for 15 minutes, the administrators were allowed to present their demands before council.

"You gotta be outa your minds," foamed Dizzy Lizzy, rationally.

"So that's where their heads are at," purred Bob Hunkaman.

Lead-Beaten just wept, quietly.

Council rejected the demands by a vote of 33-0-1. The one abstention was Maureen Marxley, who fainted at the sight of her dean in Bermuda shorts and a raccoon skin coat.

The administrators marched back to SUB, picking up stragglers and co-eds on the way.

Liberating Mr. Lead-Beaten's office, they debated the advisability of striking. After much debate, a vote was called.

When all the ballots were in, it was 100 coffee, 53 tea, 47 hot chocolate, 199 ham sandwiches, one bagel, and 174-26 in favor of a strike.

"We can no longer stand to have our vested interests compromised," said Dentedstry Dean H. R. (Keepem) Clean.

"We aren't worried about losing our jobs. We have enough academic trivia to last us for months," said an administration spokesman. "We're still trying to clean up the tangle left when a computer hiccupped during registration week."

"We have nothing to fear from the province," said another administrator.

Council says abolish unfair tenure system

By ELLEN NYGAARD

Students' council at the U of A advocates the abolishment of the tenure system as a method of evaluating academic staff.

A motion passed at Monday night's council meeting resolved that council support "(1) the abolishment of the tenure system; (2) the implementation of new means of evaluating teaching ability as the most important function of the academic staff; (3) the institution of teaching by contract; (4) that students have parity on committees which decide who is hired to teach at this university; (5) that a referendum be called by council to ascertain the decision of the students' union on these four points."

The motion introduced by academic vice-president Elizabeth Law and phys ed rep Dave O'Reilly was a result of findings of the Tenure Committee of the students' union.

BRIEF ASKS FOR BETTER TEACHER EVALUATION

The brief submitted by this committee stated that the adoption of the points of the motion by the university would mean that "the teaching staff would have the same job security as any other societal group working by contract arrangement (and that) the entire teaching staff would have to unite solidly to protect the academic freedom of the whole university teaching community."

U of A President Max Wyman, added fearfully.

The strike is now in its second day, but most students aren't too perturbed. A students' union survey showed that the only students who will realize that a strike is on are the ones who will read this story.

Loyola will go out on strike

MONTREAL (CUP)—The postponed three day strike at Loyola College has been set for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday next week.

The strike is to support demands for binding arbitration in the case of a physics professor, S. A. Santhanum, fired earlier this year by the administration after confusing deliberations about his contractual status.

A faculty petition for strike support had gained over 30 signatures by Wednesday. Supporting faculty will cancel classes during the strike.

Students originally supported calling the strike in a referendum Oct. 14 that had an 83 per cent turnout.

A total of 1,775 voted for the action and 1,762 against.

Student President Marcel Nouvet postponed the action in order to give the administration time to come to an agreement.

himself hired on a five-year contract basis, reiterated Wednesday what he stated a year ago in the General Faculty Council: that he felt that it was time that the tenure system was revoked and that people be hired on a continuing basis.

PRESENT SYSTEM FOR PRIVILEGED FEW

The present system, says the brief, grants tenure and supplies academic freedom to only those few in privileged positions.

According to the present system, tenure is granted on the basis of these criteria: (1) ability to work co-operatively with one's peers within the department (2) proven research ability (e.g. number of publications) and (3) teaching ability.

The decision regarding an individual's being granted tenure is made at the end of an initial "probationary period" of employment, usually two years, states the U of A Faculty Handbook.

At that time the individual's case is decided by a committee made up of "unbiased" members of the department, the department chairman, "unbiased" members of other departments, and the dean of the faculty or school.

The decision is made on the basis of recommendations of the chairman of the department, publications, anything of relevance from the file kept on each staff member, and the personal experience each member of the tenure committee may have had with the individual concerned.

NOTHING SHORT OF SCANDAL

The staff member is then either granted tenure, denied tenure and given another year to teach at the university pending employment elsewhere, or given a stated period of time to remain on staff after which the tenure committee reconsiders his case.

After being granted tenure, nothing short of a scandal can dislodge the individual from his permanent position on staff.

However, his position may be made uncomfortable by giving him

Year book fights back

A rally for those who wish to have the year book question aired is slated for the Main Cafeteria at Lister Hall at 5:30 p.m. today.

Ken Hutchinson, who had been retained by the students' union to edit the Evergreen and Gold, will speak at this rally.

Mr. Hutchinson says more than 2,000 signatures have been obtained on petitions demanding a re-instatement of the year book or a refund of the money paid by students for the Evergreen and Gold.

Meanwhile, Allan Ernst, owner of Goertz Studios Ltd., year book photographers, said no refunds would be made on 2,150 graduate pictures taken so far at $2 a sitting.

"We have produced our goods and the students have their merchandise," he said Wednesday. Mr. Ernst added he expects the union to reimburse his company for several hundred dollars spent on stocking special film for year book pictures.

no raises in pay or only very small raises.

TENURE NOT DEPENDENT ON ABILITY

Nevertheless, says the tenure brief, "the tenured professor's position no longer depends on his ability to teach, especially undergraduates, nor does it depend on the quality/quantity of his research publications."

These, however, are the criteria on which the world university community judges the excellence of a department. Therefore, says the brief, the present system "mitigates against the development and maintenance of academic excellence within departments in the university."

PRESENT SYSTEM PROTECTS MINORITY

"Most important of all, the present system protects only a minority of teaching staff. While a professor is vying for (tenure) he has little or no protection of his academic freedom."

The brief suggested that during times of stress, "when academic freedom is essential," this was most obvious. During such times, hiring on a contract basis would ensure equal bases of academic freedom for the entire staff.

A lot of people are up-tight about year book

Confusion

Perhaps it is only myself who is confused about this, but what the students' council accomplished last Monday night is simply beyond belief or comprehension. As I understand it, council decided that:

- there is a creature known as Evergreen and Gold, although no copies shall be printed. (Presumably we may partake of this nebulous concept in one of the utopias in the second-floor bureaucracy.)
- although no copies shall be made available, every student shall be given the privilege to pay $3.15 for each non-existent copy, on pain of sundry penalties, such as withholding of marks.

• Students are incapable of understanding anything about this (who can blame them?), and are therefore incompetent to decide by referendum whether such a set-up should be accepted.

• although, even while supporting a heavy deficit on the year book, we were informed by a certain D. Leadbeater that we had enough money to pay $18,000 to CUS, as we have had surpluses in the past, this same gentleman now tells us that we can no longer afford a year book.

• although it had decided that the year book was a good idea the week before, and while the editor of this publication was told that there would be no reason for his presence at that meeting (unless The Gateway lies), council abruptly decided to throw out an institution they had upheld a week before.

It has something of an Alice-in-Wonderland air about it, not so? At best council has been erratic, at worst it is guilty of obtaining money under false pretences. This was a council which would take action and which would listen to the student body. It has spent its time arguing over whether our student representative should be withdrawn, sometimes saying "aye"

4,000 to 5,000 students voting out of 15,000 is more representative than the 18 who happen to be able to pass council motions.

I cannot see any reason why I should have to pay for a day care centre for some uncouth woman's brats. There is absolutely no reason for the 15,000 students who get year books to have to pay for the support of the children of the small minority of women who wish to be liberated. They will probably use the centre as a babysitting service while they go shopping.

Considering the volume of students who use SUB, the place should easily be able to pay for its own expansion. If it can't I would be inclined to look for gross mismanagement.

In closing I think that council should follow the results of their referendums.

Cut 'high-handed'

I object, as do many, to the high-handed and irresponsible manner in which the year book was cut. To begin with, the deletion of the year book is in direct opposition to the wish of the majority of the student body. Furthermore, I take exception to the slight-of-hand by which the law providing for the E&G was circumscribed (it must "exist"—but it need not be "printed"!).

In addition, and equally as important, is David Leadbeater's proposal as to the priorities of the students' union. I question whether the students' union should be directed toward an "educative" rather than "service" function. Could I be wrong in assuming, as I have for the best part of five years, that the university proper is to fulfill the "educative" function and students' union the "service" (read: "and recreational") function? Wrong or not, it is my feeling that the "educative" function might better be left to the various faculties and that portion of my tuition fees allocated to the students' union be devoted to "service"—which I choose to interpret in terms of SUB facilities, the E&G and the like, rather than full time field workers.

I see that the students' union president has taken quite a lot of responsibility on his shoulders. He appears to think that we did not realize our folly by defeating the CUS referendum and therefore decides to spend $3,000 to send delegates to one of their conferences. Then he decides that we do not want a year book even though a referendum showed student approval of one. I think that Another landmark of student government has been reached—our council has at last, without a doubt, declared that its members are infinitely wiser to deal with university issues than those who elect them, even if council's views conflict with the majority of the electorate's.

A landmark

The act which clarified council's position was the axing of the E&G.

Council deliberately opposed the wishes of the majority of students, as declared in a referendum last year, and decided, under the gavel-passing leadership of Mr. Leadbeater, that there were far more pertinent areas in which the money allocated to the year book could be spent.

In other words, the student has been told that he is paying $3.15 for a year book and has affirmed his desire to pay this sum via a referendum expressing the wishes of the majority and then suddenly he learns that in actuality his $3.15 will be spent in areas in which he has not even been consulted.

The crowning touch is applied by the comforting knowledge that no copies of it will be printed.

Confirmation of logic, please, Mr. Leadbeater?

A students' council—yes; a democratic students' council—no.

An analysis

I wish to protest this action on the following grounds:

- The student body was not consulted on this move. Many students would like to have a year book as a souvenir of their career at university. They should at least be consulted before any decision concerning the future of this publication is made final.

- The means used to re-allocate the funds collected from the students to finance the year book. The method of circumventing the by-laws governing the allocation of funds proposed by Mr. Leadbeater seems to me to be outright chicanery, a ruse to take advantage of the letter of the law without observing its spirit.

- The proposed use of these funds. The Gateway indirectly quotes Mr. Leadbeater as saying these funds would be used for "day-care centres, SUB expansion and educational programs." On the Throw 'em out

Last council meeting the E&G felt the axe as, it appears to me, did the students' union council as a body representative of the students. Within the range of my hearing today I overheard a number of students, who were very up-tight over this matter, suggest doing things like impeaching our lovable president, David Leadbeater, and a few other councillors as well. Another suggestion was to march on the students' union and throw the whole bunch out. Extreme but they seemed quite serious about it.

I would tend to agree with a lot of what they said. Who or what is the students' union—the students or the clique in SUB? The council talks of democratic means of getting students' say on university governing bodies. How credulous can they be if they deny such a democratic process as a referendum on an important issue such as the 'to be or not to be' of the Evergreen and Gold?

Perhaps the council is acting in what it believes is in the best interests of the students. However, they seem to be in financial trouble and still wish to involve themselves in such issues as 'Women's Liberation.' If the problem lies in the allocation of funds towards the different areas of students' union involvement then it is a question of priorities. For example, would money be better spent on Women's Liberation or on the E&G.

I seriously question the council's estimation of priorities and would suggest that if the students' union council truly wish to represent the student body's interests that a referendum on priorities be held to determine what the average student feels is important. The referendum would include all areas of SU involvement. I would be happy to work on the committee set up for this. I personally feel that if I have to pay into the students' union that they should represent my views.

$3.15 or fraud

From the background information supplied, I have gathered that $3.15 out of the monies collected by the students' union is to be designated to the E&G. One would assume that he would receive the year book he is entitled to or a refund for monies already paid into this department. The interesting point is that the students' council intends to produce neither a year book nor a refund.

Mr. Leadbeater claims that legally, all he needs is an inactive department called the E&G, in order to collect these monies.

We were led to believe that we were to get a year book for which we paid, but now we are not. This could be termed as misrepresentation, because students' council cannot produce what they said they would.

I will go a step further and suggest that the students' council be charged with fraud if they fail to produce the goods they owe us, or a refund of $3.15. They should be prosecuted, as any other swindler would be.

They might also remember, that they are responsible for producing crooked people. In this case we are certainly getting an excellent lesson in bending the law and unethical conduct.
